

Process Safety
Management & Ch-38
Management of Change
Homework Answers

01

Management of change is required for:

A. Replacement in kind

B. Machine guarding

C. Any replacement that is not considered to be replacement in kind

D. Replacement of respirator cartridges

02

The OSHA Process Safety Standard requires employers with applicable processes to implement a Contractor Safety Program. Elements of the Contractor Safety Program include the following EXCEPT:

A. Evaluate safety of contractor before hire

B. Process safety training

C. Explain Emergency Action Plan

D. Maintain a contract employee injury and illness log

03

Which of the following is the first step in establishing an effective process safety management program?

A. Employee training

B. Hazard analysis

C. Written process safety management program

D. Establishing the safety culture

04

Formal audits to certify process safety requirements must be conducted by:

- A. Audits must be conducted by the Process Engineer
- B. Audits must be conducted by at least one person who is familiar with the process
- C. Audits must be conducted by the PSM team
- D. The Process/Plant Manager

05

Which system, comprising tools, processes, and procedures, significantly lowers the risk of accidental releases of highly hazardous chemicals when correctly implemented and adhered to?

A. Process Safety Management

B. Hazard Communication Standard

C. Safety Data Sheet documentation

D. Globally Harmonized System

06

What is the primary purpose of getting employee and management feedback during change management?

- A. To identify and assess the influence of various parties on the change process
- B. To determine the financial implications of the change
- C. To assign blame for past failures
- D. To create a detailed plan for implementing the change

07

One of the most commonly used Process Hazard Analysis tools in Process Safety Management is:

A. Hazard and Operability Analysis (HAZOP)

B. Job Hazard Analysis (JHA)

C. Systemic Cause Event Tree (SCET)

D. Energy Flow Analytical Procedure (EFAP)

Why is it important to manage changes in the workplace effectively?

- A. While people may appreciate traditional methods, they aren't necessarily opposed to trying new ways.
- B. Changes to equipment or processes can directly affect workplace safety.
- C. Adhering to changes is a requirement under OSHA's lockout and guardrail standards.
- D. Newly introduced machinery might present operational challenges.

09

What does a Fault Tree Analysis (FTA) focus on in a system safety assessment?

A. Identifying system design strengths

B. Visualizing and analyzing potential causes of system failures

C. Increasing production speed

D. Testing the quality of products

10

A management of change process for almost any workplace includes

- A. Administration of questionnaires to the affected production department
- B. Use of the Heinrich Ratio to prevent near misses and accidents
- C. RACI chart implementation
- D. Preparing the group for change and empowering them in the process

11

A written Management of Change Program is required by OSHA for:

A. Confined Space

B. Lockout

C. Process Safety Management

D. Emergency Response Program

12

What is the primary purpose of conducting a Hazard and Operability (HAZOP) study in a process plant?

- A. To identify potential hazards and evaluate their risks
- B. To develop emergency response plans
- C. To train employees on safety procedures
- D. To investigate accidents and incidents

The management of the change process covers four primary concepts, regardless of the type of change. Three of these are:

1. Identification of hazards associated with the change
2. Assessment of the risks associated with the change
3. Consideration of the hazards and risks prior to the change

Which is the fourth primary concept?

- A. Hiring additional management personnel to oversee and direct organizational change
- B. Performance of a “what if” analysis to identify expected risks
- C. Implementation of controls needed to address hazards and risks associated with the change
- D. Compliance with all applicable regulatory guidelines regarding changes in an occupational health and safety management program